The mutant allele termed 80-fold parous (80F0) was induced by exposing flies to hydrostatic pressure during a single egg stage in the germline stem cell line. The mutant phenotype is characterized by a chromosomal instability, a deficiency of mitotic recombination and a high frequency of dominant lethal mutations in the next generation. Genetic mapping was performed using null mutations in multiple genes involved in mitotic recombination. The centromeric region of chromosome arm 2L (approximately 7D) was found to be involved in 80F0, as was the fourth chromosome region. Analysis of an 80F0/TM3, Sb, slbo and slboc with deficiencies in this region of 2L and the region of the fourth chromosome on the right arm (approximately 81C) confirmed that the region of 2L is most likely the causal locus. The frequency of 80F0 is likely to be
